YEAR
REVIEW

In an unprecedented year, the GIH commitment to help funders learn, connect, and grow took new and reimagined shape. As I reflect on this year of great change, adversity, and opportunity, I am proud to share some of GIH's accomplishments in 2020:

- Assembling resources for health funders on the pandemic and its intersection with our multiple programming areas, from health equity to behavioral health. Our newly developed COVID-19 issue page was among the most visited pages on gih.org for multiple months running.
- Working with the field to repackage the wealth of knowledge slated for the 2020 GIH Annual Conference on Health Philanthropy. Browse www.gih.org to access this content.
- Engaging funders as the sector heightened its focus on rural health, health disparities, and racial justice. Over the summer, GIH mobilized to share resources and highlight the long-standing and new commitments made by philanthropy. As we entered fall, we held numerous calls for foundation leadership and equity-focused staff and administered a health equity survey to understand how philanthropy is adapting their work in this area. I look forward to sharing these results in the coming weeks.
- Holding our first virtual multiday events, including the Terrance Keenan Institute for Emerging Leaders, our biennial professional leadership development opportunity for the field's next-generation leaders, and the Fall Forum, our annual policy-focused meeting for health funders. This year's meeting offered two series tracks: Better Health, Stronger Democracy and Food for a Healthier America.
- Embarking on a strategic planning process—which will extend into 2021—to ensure that we can best support the sector through a changing landscape, and in the years to come.
- And, of course, continuing to develop and release articles, reports, and surveys on COVID-19, health equity, and other vital health or health-intersecting topics; convene funders virtually on developing issues; and respond to requests for strategic guidance in a critical year.

I invite you to peruse the complete products list to revisit your learning and access content exclusive to our Funding Partners.

I strongly believe that GIH is entering the new year better positioned to support this community to learn from experts and peers, connect across interests, and grow together. Thank you for your energy, commitment, and flexibility. I look forward to building on these accomplishments in 2021.
